Grandfather Lickshingle and the Edison Cincinnati Enquirer. "I am willin' to admit," said Grandfather Lickshingle, "that Mr. Edison has invented a wonderful invention."

Several members of the family arose and started for the door. "I was well aware," continued grand-father, without changing his tone, "that some persons resist any attempts at enlightenment on scientific topics, an' I therefore locked the door and put the key in my pocket. There is a tale of a sea captain who, in distant corner of the Southern seas, visited an undiscovered or unexplored group of beautiful islands. After landing and trading with the gentle natives, he was astonished by the visit of a white man, evidently a person of means and consequence, who, after making himself very as he at once came upon her she him a story book, if he had such a thing in his possession. The captain had, and deeply touched by the pigs and co-coanuts which the white exile had given him, bestowed on him a copy of the 'Arabian Nights' Entertainments." Overcome by the present, the exile burst into tears, and cried, "You have saved my life and given me wealth." On explana-tion, he said, "I should long ago have been eaten, but while they they were fattening me learned enough of their language to tell a child the story of "Little Red Riding Hood." The child repeated it and the whole population were mad with They had never heard a story before. From that day I became a great When they had This account has also been confirmed by w. U. Beasts and Reptiles in India.

Some very interesting statistics are published by government regarding the destruction of wild animals and venomous snakes in British India, and of the number of human beings and cattle killed by them. The general results of the reports from various local governments show that the number of persons killed by wild animals in 1877 was 2918, and in the following year 3444; by venomous snakes, 16,777 and 16,812 in the same years, respectively. Cattle killed by wild animals and snakes in 1877 and 1878 numbered 53,197 and 48, 701 in each year. In 1877, 22,851 wild animals were destroyed and in the following year 22,487; and of venomous snakes, 127,295 in the former and 117,958 in the latter year. The amounts of rewards paid for the destruction of wild beasts and poisonous snakes was in 1877, 103,017 rupees, and in 1878, 99,189 rupees. The general results, therefore, are that the number of persons killed has increased, while the number of cattle so killed, the number of wild animals and snakes destroyed, and the amount of rewards paid show a decrease. The increase in the number of persons killed by wild animals is attributed to a great extent to the deaths from wolves in the Northwestern provinces and Oude, which have increased from 380 in 1877 to 624 in 1878. The lieutenant governor has invited the attention of district officers to the subject with a view of more effective measures being taken for the destruction or these animals. With reference to lightnin' had no more color to it than a deaths from snake bites, the number of persons thus killed has decreased from 16,846 in 1876 to 16,812 in 1877, while the number of cattle has decreased from 2,945 in 1877 to 1,825 in the year under review. Gimp Bands, Curtain Loops, Hooks, &c. The returns showing the number of cattle killed are, doubtless, as observed by the chief commissioner of the central day. By attachin' a ten-cent dufunny to provinces, less trustworthy than those of your burner it 'ud generate a power that persons. But his excellency the governor general in council trusts that the reports of the current year will show the extent to which the suggestion that municipal bodies should offer rewards for the destruction of snakes in towns and large villages has been acted upon and with what results. This matter is one of importance, and should not be lost sight of.

About Parrots.

All the Year Round. A notable fact in relation to the peculiar food giving a flavor to the flesh of animals, such as muddy weeds to that of fish, fish to wild ducks, acorns to the flesh of pork, and many other instances, is most remarkable in the case of parrots. We are assured by those who living in South Africa, have frequently eaten of parrots, that the delicacy of the flesh varies from a luxury to positive rejection during certain seasons of the year. When the delicious guava is ripe they are sapid and fat; the seed of the acajou imparts a slight and not disagreeable soupcon of garlic; spicy seeds council was informed that if the city would give not only the flavor but an aroma of receive Grant in its corporate capacity, two cinnamon, cloves, etc., and all berries or three of Grant's personal friends would give a peculiar quality to their flesh. They are moreover wine-bibbers. islands in October a large number remain each year to pair and nest in suitable localities and this being so, no doubt the follow-ing curious habit of the parent birds has only to be called attention too to be fully corroborated: The late Mr. Lloyd, in his "Scandinavian Adventures," wrote: "If in shooting you meet with a brood of woodcocks and the young ones cannot fly, the old bird takes them separately between her feet and flies from the dogs with a moaning cry;" and Mr. Harting, in the November number of his journal, the zoologist, has been at the trouble to collect all the records of so strange a habit, from which record it would appear that there is a difference among observers as to whether the young birds are carried in the claws of the parent bird or pressed beeween her breast and legs. One of the brothers Stuart, in the second volume of the "Lays of the Deer Forest," in a very graphic account of the troubles which the old woodcocks have with their young ones, says that he saw a woodcock rising with a young bird in her feet, her long legs dangling and swinging with her little burden, like a parachute, got up. In her hurry she dropped the young bird. She came to the ground, however, almost at the same time as the o25-lydMW&S&3mw young one; running back she sat upon him and rose again with him in her claws. Mr. C. St. John, in his "Natural History and Sport in Moray," declares "that the old woodcock carries her young, even when larger than a snipe, not in her claws, which seem quite incapable of holding up any weight, but by clasping the little bird tightly between her thighs, and so holding it tight to her own body;" and, further, "that in the spring and summer evenings the woodcock may be seen so employed, passing to and fro and uttering A. J. STEINMAN, a gentle cry on their way from the woods to the marshes where they feed." CHAS. R. According to Audubon the same habit has been observed in the American species and apparently, it also sometimes occurs in our common snipe.
